Dated: Feb 24, 2007

SettlementRoom and Lone Wolf have teamed up to offer real estate offices a seamless integration between their transaction management and financial management platforms.

SettlementRoom, the premier transaction management system for real estate, today announced that it is adding seamless integration with Lone Wolf's powerful suite of financial management and accounting tools for real estate brokers.

Existing users of Lone Wolf's Realty Management System will now be able to pull transaction data directly from their SettlementRoom transaction management accounts, eliminating double data entry and creating a seamless flow of information from listing to closing, and from front end to back end systems.

According to Jonathan Cutler, President of SettlementRoom, "our users have been asking us to develop integrations so they can pass data back and forth between the applications they use every day. The Lone Wolf integration is a very important piece of that puzzle, nicely complimenting our other recent integrations with Forms, CRM, and Registered Email. The SettlementRoom / Lone Wolf relationship will add significant value to both our applications, providing brokers a smooth workflow from the marketing stage to post-closing."

Lorne Wallace, President of Lone Wolf adds "The holy grail in real estate is the single point of entry. We are all striving towards it and I believe our integration with SettlementRoom is an important step in this direction. Along with our Global Wolf web-site solutions and our Wolf/EX extranet, we are able to share agent data in a single source, integrating lead management, transaction processing and administration into an efficient process for the real estate brokerage. "

SettlementRoom is a web-based listing and transaction management software for the real estate industry, serving agents, brokers, multi-office agencies, title companies, lenders, and builders, with over 100,000 registered users nationwide.
