Video enthusiasts can now wirelessly Stream HD movies and content from the Web and PCs to their HDTV

BALDWIN PARK, CALIF. July 13, 2007 – MediaGate, a provider of wireless HDTV and PC digital video drives, has joined the competitive multimedia market with the introduction of the MG-350HD. Streaming online media, music, and photos has never been easier, and with a price of $249 MSRP, it's never been more affordable.

Some people's entertainment may be tied to their PCs, while others may seek their entertainment from their PVRs. While video fanatics can link iTunes and YouTube videos through the Apple TV and the SlingBox bringing content to PCs, what has been lacking is the ability to bridge content from the PC and the Web to an HDTV – wirelessly, and easy enough for the masses. The MG-350HD allows users to simply download media from their favorite networks to their PC or directly to the device, allowing users to steam HD content on their TVs.

The MediaGate MG-350HD entertainment server unites the network and home entertainment center, providing the ability to share, access, and enjoy digital media -- whether it is motion pictures, TV shows, music, videos, or photos. This unique multimedia player supports both wireless and wired connections between the TV and network and also supports High Definition (HD) playback.

“The MediaGate MG-350HD connects home theaters, PCs, and the Web providing an instant wireless video server for the masses,” stated Jason Chen, President of Sales and Marketing of MediaGate. “Not only can it stream media, it can also store all forms of multimedia content for on demand viewing at the touch of the remote.”

The MG-350HD utilizes a media processor which supports high-definition MPEG-2 and MPEG-4. This multimedia organizer is equipped with an 802.11g wireless connection, and also includes a USB2.0 port.
