Dated: Dec 11, 2007

Training and human resource professionals can find and register for thousands of 2008 seminars and training programs at SeminarInformation.com. Search by city, date, topic, title or sponsoring organization at this easy to use, free site.

SeminarInformation.com, the largest database of seminars and conferences on the Internet has just listed 2008 dates and locations for thousands of training programs.

"Since 1981 we have been the source for seminar information," says Catherine Bellizzi, President and co-founder of Seminar Information Service, Inc. the creator of www.SeminarInformation.com. "We have always provided complete information on our free website, making it easier for potential attendees to find a seminar, compare it to other seminars in their area or topic of interest, then read complete brochures and finally register - all in a few clicks on our user-friendly website."

Over 600 seminar sponsoring organizations are listed on the website providing over 360,000 sessions. Users are also able to search an in-house only section to find those courses that are available on demand at a location of their choosing. "Our Personalized Recommendation service puts our users in touch with one of our seminar experts who can help them select just the right seminar for their needs and then assist in scheduling that seminar at a location of their choice" adds Bellizzi.

Complete schedules and brochures are listed for seminars from Skillpath, National Seminars, American Management Association, Cornell University, Linkage, Learning Tree, Cross Country Education, Fred Pryor, Padgett Thompson, CareerTrack, UCLA, Global Knowledge, MIS and NCCE to name just a few.
