While Safety is a government issue, Survival is the people's method. How does Home school answer to safety and survival?

Vanessa has decided her children are safer attending a virtual school at home via the internet. It takes a little effort to adjust to the idea, but once done it is a way to survive a culture of terror. Her virtual homeschool boasts a Christian based "back to the basics" curriculum and the kids love it.

While Homeschool students escape threats of terror, their peers in public schools do not. They are often prisoners of a public school lock down which means parents are unable to get to them until the government gives the okay.

Only recently in the news, the United Nations announced it would be gifting FREE Spiderman comic books to tens of thousands of children in public schools across America. If you are confused about this gift, you should be. After all, what does Superhero Spiderman have in common with an International Organization? And just what is the rescue mission all about?

The kids all know when someone needs help; Spiderman is called to the rescue. Is the UN someone needing rescue? And if you say, "Yes," the argument is the UN is not someone, but a fictional group of people behind a cloak. So what's the mission here?

It is rumored Spiderman is being hired by the UN to beat evil? What evil? We have enough evil at home we don't need to fight someone else's evil. It is told the UN wants to teach American children how to care about the evil that plaques the world, but what they don't tell the kids is that Spiderman can't rescue the world, he can't rescue nobody because he is only a fiction! He is as fiction as the UN. The only ones able to rescue the world are the readers of the propaganda in the comic book. Vanessa Shaw earns a lucrative income in a virtual office at home while home schooling her kids. She recommends more parents look critically into the institution of public schools and examine the appearance of gifts. She believes homeschooling is a direct way to keep her children safe from injury both to their minds and bodies.
