

HOMESCHOOL: Try the “virtual” classroom

By The Shaw Group

Dated: Mar 03, 2008

Home school has just become easier for parents wanting to school their child at home while running a home-based business.

“Old-style” home school places the burden on parents to contact the State to set up homeschool curriculum, and then the additional burden of lining-up educational activities and resources to create the calendar of daily assignments and lesson plans. It also requires these parents to record keep for the inspecting government worker. It is enough to discourage any parent from the thought of home schooling.

But here’s good news! There is an alternative home school! A teacher-led home school in a “virtual” classroom! Most are accredited, independent, private on-line schools available from kindergarten to twelfth grade. They provide the calendar of daily assignments and lesson plans delivered through the internet and includes a combination of online and offline components including:

- EBooks (electronic books with websites, photos, quizzes)
- Videos
- Workbooks
- CD-ROMs

“Home school students will study, complete assignments, take quizzes and tests and collaborate with other members of this unique online home school community.”

Virtual home school has freed Vanessa up to run her home-based “virtual” office to monitor her child’s progress, and time to set up extra-curricular sports activities and field trips. Because the online school takes care of record-keeping, her child always knows where she is with her assignments, and how she is doing in each class. The best part of it all is no inspecting governmental worker required.
