By Home School Talk

Dated: Jul 03, 2008

Dana Hanley, a former public school teacher, current homeschooler and author of the homeschool blog Principled Discovery will be launching Home School Talk, a weekly one hour broadcast focused on homeschool news and opinion.

Dana Hanley, a former public school teacher, current homeschooler and author of the homeschool blog Principled Discovery <http://principleddiscovery.com> will be launching Home School Talk <http://blogtalkradio.com/homeschooltalk>, a weekly one hour broadcast focused on homeschool news and opinion on July 7, 2008. As a blogger, Hanley has found discussions with homeschoolers across the country and even around the world to be engaging and purposeful as they use the Internet to connect, communicate and organize.

Topics to be discussed include legislation affecting homeschooling, research summaries, stereotypes and other items which make the news. The guest for the first show will be Terri Willingham of Learning Is For Everyone <http://www.learningis4everyone.org/>. We will be talking about how homeschooling benefits society. Listeners will have the opportunity to join the program by calling in, utilizing the live chat associated with the show or submitting their own audio clips to be considered for use on the show.
