Celerity Consulting Group, Inc and Content Analyst Company Announce Partnership

Celerity Consulting Group, Inc., a technology-driven consulting firm, and Content Analyst Company, provider of advanced text analytics software, have announced a partnership that will add Content Analyst capabilities to Celerity's OLIVERsm

July 19, 2008 - PRLog -- OLIVER is an online viewer tool that allows mass collections of paper or electronically stored information (ESI) in native format to be produced for, or reviewed from, opposing parties. OLIVER accelerates research and review by organizing and prioritizing review efforts, tracking productivity, and offering various collaboration tools to the attorney review effort. The integration of Content Analyst's technology into OLIVER allows reviewers to find similar documents based on conceptual relevance, while categorizing them into groups that are conceptually related even if they don't contain specific key words.

Kurt Michel, President of Content Analyst, states "Celerity's customers are some of the world's best known law firms and organizations. Their selection of Content Analyst for incorporation into their premier review tool, OLIVER, further underscores the significance the market sees in our products to enhance processing and review tools while providing a compelling return on investment."

Norman Yee, Celerity's Vice President and COO, comments, "Our customers depend on OLIVER to be robust, defensible, and scalable to meet their ever-growing requirements in eDiscovery and litigation support. Content Analyst's technology met all those objectives and more. We will continue to integrate new features as they are released from Content Analyst into OLIVER and are considering Content Analyst for other products we have in development as well, particularly in the litigation readiness and information risk management space."

Celerity's OLIVERsm with Content Analyst is in production now, and available for license to Celerity users worldwide.
