

Advantages of Using Tax Relief

Each year, millions of Americans are unable to pay their income taxes in full. As a result, they are often charged penalties that make it even more difficult to completely pay all of the taxes that are owed.

Oct. 6, 2008 - PRLog -- Orange, CA, There are a variety of different tax relief programs available that are approved by the IRS to help taxpayers. One of the advantages of using a tax relief program is that taxpayers can utilize a negotiated settlement offer. With this program, taxpayers will be able to make a reasonable offer to the IRS in an attempt to settle their taxes. The overall goal of this program is for the IRS to receive a portion of the debt that is owed on an account that is classified as non-collectable, which will result in the least cost to the government.

Another advantage of using tax relief is that Americans can take advantage of the penalty abatement program offered by the IRS. This program is different from the negotiated settlement in that taxpayers are asking the government to forgive any penalties that have been charged to their overdue account because of reasons that were out of their control.

There are four main categories of challenges that can be made to the IRS. The first is reasonable cause, which includes an illness or death. The next is statutory exemptions, which includes changes in the tax laws that would have affected the taxpayer. Administrative waivers are given to taxpayers who have suffered a hardship like a natural disaster and a correction of service error is filed when a mistake has been made by the IRS when it comes to filing the taxpayers return.
