

Single Women Flock to High-End Matchmakers During Harsh Economic Times

Matchmakers who specialize in high net-worth clients are seeing a sharp rise in women wanting inclusion into their pool.

During the recent economic down turn women are becoming desperate to find their knight-in-shining-armor for rescue. Whether facing foreclosure, job loss, excessive credit card debt, or just fear of the unknown, women want to partner up - and not with just anyone. Matchmakers specializing in high net-worth clients are seeing a sharp rise in their female membership pool. Melinda Maximova, owner of Perfect Search in the Bay Area, has seen her female membership triple since last spring. "Women are scared" Maximova explains. "They want a financially secure man to take away their fears and assure them that they will be okay." Maximova's clients are men with significant assets who can afford the 5,500 retainer for matchmaking services. "The very wealthy aren't nearly as affected by stock market chaos as middle-income people", Maximova points out. "Clients who are worth 100 million and lose 20 million still have 80 million left. This is very appealing for single women struggling to make a monthly mortgage payment. And there are more super wealthy men in the Bay Area than many places in the country making business very popular".

Women wanting inclusion into the Perfect Search candidate pool can self upload their profile directly into the website for a one time processing fee of 29.95. They will be contacted when a potential match is identified.
