What is the value of an online high school diploma? This is the question the Florida-based Continental Academy is attempting to answer, on behalf of educators and students nationwide.

Miramar, Florida 2008 — Continental Academy is stuck in the middle of the war of words between educators and home schooling parents. This is why the online high school diploma institution states its mission upfront. The online high school diploma course offers one option to students who have already dropped out of high school and want to take responsible steps to finish their education. Showing this dedication will no doubt assure future employers or colleges that they are capable of following through on a challenging goal.

The school doesn't want to give the impression that they are encouraging students to leave public school in favor of home-schooling. However, they do recommend that students work harder to achieve a legitimate high school diploma rather than simply taking a GED test or forgoing a diploma altogether. Continental Academy is also aware of the negative stigma associated with many home school institutions, but Continental Academy's credentials exhibit a trustworthy, well recognized educational institution.

The school has been accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, as well as the Commission on International and Trans-Regional Accreditation, and the State of Florida Department of Education. It is evident that Continental Academy wants to set the example in assuming educational responsibility and hopes that students, indeed the future of America, will take the opportunity to obtain their high school diplomas.
