ExitReality and sponsor Webcruzer are turning a Paris Hilton-hosted New Year's party into the World's Largest Online 3D party with live streaming of the event.

Worldwide publicity has surrounded the announcement of celebrity Paris Hilton launching The Bongo Virus New Year's Eve bash in Sydney. Now ExitReality and sponsor Webcruzer will turn Paris's party into the World's Largest Online 3D party with live streaming of the event.

"The groundbreaking 3D party palace invention is taking The Bongo Virus' New Years Eve party to the next level, by enabling users the opportunity to create their own individual avatars within the one space, whilst partying with the heiress herself," said founder of Webcruzer and sponsor of the online party, 24-year-old Paul Flammea.

"Exit Reality is excited to be involved in what is going to be an exceptional online experience. Now we can move into all the technology, laser lights, streaming music, streaming video, dancing etc. This is going to be a very exciting New Years Eve," said founder of ExitReality and inventor of the 3D technology, Danny Stefanic.

The Bongo Virus is a new platform that converges mobile phone and internet applications in one solution. Launching this December 31st with the world's largest New Years Eve party, ExitReality, a free internet plug-in that converts the entire World Wide Web into 3D and Webcruzer, a recession busting business website solution, have now also jumped onto the party bandwagon as sponsor.

The 3D party palace will plunge users into another universe with its realistic replica of the Sydney NYE party. From the paparazzi and photographers following Paris Hilton, to nightclub dancing on the main dance floor, users will be able to experience the unimaginable.
