Colon Cleansing became wildly popular in 2008 and some industry experts estimate that online colon cleanser sales will double in 2009.

With colon cancer being one of the leading killers in America, a strong focus on colon health has emerged. Many people have turned to alternative medicine to improve their odds of avoiding it. Some health practitioners maintain that colon cleansing is not only worthless but harmful - but on the other hand, there are practitioners that believe colon cleansing is an important part of preventative care for the body.

The recent surge in awareness has brought a wide array of new colon cleansing products onto the market. With little information available about these products, people are turning to internet websites like <http://www.ColonEDU.com> to get the facts about each individual colon cleanser that comes onto the market. Many of the colon cleansing products available offer free samples as a way to get people to try colon cleansing for the first time. One product that is readily available as a free sample is Colon Aid 700 (<http://www.colonaid700.net>). The makers of products like Colon Aid are at the forefront of a massive surge in demand. So much demand in fact, that manufacturers of many different types of colon cleansers have limited the number of products they are willing to sell each day. They simply cannot make them fast enough to keep up with the growing demand. With new years coming up, losing weight is a huge priority for many Americans. This is expected to start colon cleansing sales off at a pace that could be double, or even triple what they were in 2008. This optimistic forecast even accounts for the recession and looming depression. People are spending their money on security and health, and there seems to be no slowing it. Nutraceutical stocks have seen optimistic stability despite the shakiness of the market in recent months.
