Rainmaker Properties is the only real estate brokerage in Silicon Valley at which its broker and agents express and live their lives and careers based upon Christian values with each transaction. Today, the company announces that it has donated $40,000 to local charities in 2008 alone.

Charities the firm supports include the March of Dimes, Second Harvest Food Bank, Abundant Life Christian Fellowship, Hidden Villa, Habitat for Humanity Silicon Valley and Greater San Francisco, Great Exchange Covenant Church, Interplast, Bridge Community Church, Susan G. Komen for the Cure, The Leukemia and Lymphoma Society, World Vision, China Sichuan Earthquake Relief Fund, The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, and the Humane Society Silicon Valley.

Director of Development for Silicon Valley's Human Society, Bridget Keenan, said "We were thrilled to receive the generous checks from Rainmaker Properties recently, and when I called to thank Rainmaker for the gifts, Alex Wang explained that his company donates on behalf of the charity of their clients' choice! This support means so much to our organization, and what a great way for both the family and Rainmaker to give back to the community."

Alex Wang founded Rainmaker Properties in January 2007 based on his Christian faith. The Rainmaker Properties team focuses on building long-term relationships with clients by using their professional expertise to help clients buy or sell residential real estate in Silicon Valley. Its mission is to provide superior service before, during, and after every sale.

Using faith as its foundation, the firm gives back to the community by donating 10 percent of every commission to the local charity of the client's choosing.

"As part of this commitment to the community, Rainmaker Properties has given Bay Area homeowners an immediate, online source of free real estate advice at www.RealEstateRain.com, a new blog launched by Silicon Valley residential real estate brokerage Rainmaker Properties," says Alex Wang, the firm's owner-broker.

The new blog provides readers with constantly updated, real-world information on how the Rainmaker Properties real estate team uses its expertise to build relationships with clients buying, selling, or managing residential real estate in Silicon Valley.

On the blog, consumers can find a range of advice, including tips for making smart real estate buying, selling, and management decisions; information on community events and charitable causes; and insights on improving their lives.
