If you suffer from terrible itching, constant rashes and broken, bleeding skin then it's more than likely you are suffering from eczema. Lots of people suffer from this irritating and painful condition, many of them use store bought remedies and suffer in silence.

Eczema can break out on any area of your body and the red rashes and broken skin soon become unsightly. Many eczema sufferers say that there is a lack of understanding regarding eczema in the general population, and some report that people avoid them because of their rashes and broken skin.

There are some things you can do, such as wearing rubber gloves when you are doing any household chores and using a non-lanolin based cream to help moisturize the very dry skin that results from eczema. The skin becomes so thin and sensitive that even drying off with a rough towel can cause the skin to break open and bleed. Very often people who suffer from eczema are more prone to colds and viruses than non-sufferers, so the condition can have more serious implications.

Those eczema sufferers who go to see their doctor with the complaint are given creams and washing solutions, in some cases, and with persistent outbreaks of the condition your doctor might prescribe steroids. When you have finished listening to the doctor's advice and tried out all the pills and potions that you are prescribed, the symptoms disappear for a while – but the disease is still there.

There are plenty of theories as to why some people suffer from eczema and others don't, and although there are plenty of ideas and theories, other than genetic factors there is no clear idea of why people suffer from eczema – until Beat eczema now that is.
