Dated: Jun 17, 2009

Attendees to learn how to use WordPress as a Content Management System

Dallas, Texas -- WordPress Plugin developer Scott Kingsley Clark of Vizion Interactive (<http://www.vizioninteractive.com>) will present at the WordCamp Dallas 2009 conference to be held on Saturday, June 27 and Sunday, June 28, 2009 at the University of Texas at Dallas in Richardson, Texas.

Mr. Clark has been a strong proponent of utilizing WordPress as a content management system for many years. Along with his beliefs, Mr. Clark has been an active contributor in the WordPress community, providing many free, useful and helpful plug-ins for others who are using WordPress.

"Our company is honored to have Scott Kingsley Clark speaking at WordCamp. Scott will have the opportunity to provide his insight and experiences of using WordPress as a Content Management System (CMS) on a daily basis and share some of the Plugins that he has developed," said Vizion Interactive President/CEO Mark Jackson.

This two-day event is designed for those with a passion for WordPress – users, designers, developers and anyone else who is interested in learning the latest about this ever growing platform. Attendees also get a chance to network with some of the best known leaders in the field – including Matt Mullenweg, founder of the WordPress platform and Automattic.
