

Gene Potter Reveals How Building Chicken Coops Leads to Happy Chickens

By Building Chicken Coops

Dated: Jun 20, 2009

What is a chicken coop? Simply put, it is a place to keep chickens. Often, people build chicken coops without considering the needs of their hens. With just a bit of knowledge and preplanning, people can build coops that keep hens happy.

Unhappy chickens often leads to poor egg production. If you are, or are planning on, raising chickens so you have fresh eggs, then it is important that you keep your chickens happy by providing them with adequate chicken housing.

Unfortunately, people often provide housing for their hens without considering what their hens need. With just a bit of knowledge and preplanning, building chicken coops that are pleasing to both people and chickens is easy to do. Best of all, happy chickens usually results in better egg production.

That is why Gene Potter decided to release tested and proven methods for building chicken runs with materials easily found at local home improvement stores, Building Chicken Coops at <http://www.buildingchickencoopsruns.com>.

"My wife and I built our first chicken coop quite a few years ago. We had no idea what we were doing, but the end result looked pretty good to us. Too bad we didn't consult with our chickens! The coop looked nice enough, but it wasn't very chicken-friendly. We even made a critical error that allowed local wildlife in and they got a few of our hens. It didn't take long for us to realize what we had done wrong and we've since built better coops that keep our chickens safe and happy. We are now sharing our knowledge so others won't make the same mistakes we made," said Gene Potter, creator of the website Building Chicken Coops.

Gene created his website to share information about building hen houses. He shares the most common problems new builders typically make and how to prevent them. He even provides construction plans that makes building coops extremely easy.

To learn more about building your own chicken coops, go to <http://www.buildingchickencoopsruns.com>.

Category Agriculture
Tags building chicken coops, building chicken housing
Email Click to email author