The 1.77 inch TFT display provides 256,000 colour variants within its display. This ensures clarity of image and superb image colour reproduction. The display offers 120 x 160 pixel resolution as well. The phone weighs just over 100 g which means it's reasonably lightweight to carry and with its relatively small size is not cumbersome, as some phones are when marketed as durable.

The phone offers a 1.3 mega pixel camera at a resolution of 1280 x 1024 pixels, which is sufficient to enable its user to take vivid snap shots of good quality. The integral flash ensures sufficient illumination. The camera also allows video capture at 15 frames per second, which is a useful addition. It offers viable options for capturing special moments for viewing at a more convenient time. Internal memory on this phone is only 7Mb, However it can be easily expanded up to a more realistic and generous 8 Gb, by making use of the available microSD slot.

For those interested in listening to music an MP3 player is provided. This player supports many file formats including MP3, eAAC and WMA as well as WAV formats. This ensures that whatever songs are downloaded can usually be played on this MP3 player. The phone also provides an FM radio, to enable access to local and national radio broadcasts including news, weather and shows. For connectivity the phone provides GPRS, HSCSD and EDGE as well as Blue tooth and USB. This ensures that files can be transferred, the phone can be synchronised with a PC.

The Samsung B2100 Solid Extreme Black offers a great deal, its anti shock urethane exterior provides water resistance up to 1 metre as well as being shock, and dust resistant. Apart from its durability it's also packed with features that grace many other phones. This phone is a handset for those who need a phone which will withstand some rough treatment. It's built to last and no doubt will still operate when many other phones will have given up the ghost.
