The name Sonim has become synonymous with rugged, durable mobile phones. Their XP range of phones is almost legendary for their toughness. The Sonim Landrover S1 is a step up from the previous incarnations and adds additional functionality to the durability that has marked Sonim's presence within the mobile phone market. This tough and durable phone is the world's first IP-67 rated phone and provides suitable functionality to bring it up to match other more frail counterparts. What sets the new phone apart is the addition of functions that eluded other Sonim phones, such as a camera, GPS and blue tooth.

The camera is a 2 mega pixel camera which offers the ability to take excellent snapshots and save them for viewing later on the TFT screen. The phone is water, dust and shock resistant as well, being able to be submerged for over 30 minutes without affecting it. The unit can also be dropped from a height of 2 metres and still function, which is obviously not advisable but does highlight one of the key benefits of this phone. One of the other key benefits is the fact that the phone has over 1500 hours standby time and 18 hours of talk time, which is impressive and extremely useful if your in the middle of nowhere and unable to charge the battery. The phone also comes with GPS and Blue tooth which provides navigational support and the ability to transfer files with other suitably attired mobile phones as well as a built in torch.
