The 3.0 inch TFT resistive touch screen has a resolution of 240 x 400 pixels and displays 256,000 colours and their variants to ensure sufficient depth and clarity of image. The screen also utilises an accelerometer sensor which automatically rotates images to ensure images are viewed in their correct aspect, this is an important element that is often overlooked. Handwriting recognition is also offered which provides a simple means of entering data into the handset and can speed up the process of data entry and texting.

The phones camera is 3.15 mega pixels and has a resolution of 2048 x 1536 pixels, which is good enough to take good quality snapshots and with the addition of smile detection offers the opportunity to ensure images of the subject are taken correctly. The phone also has video capabilities which can record at QVGA quality and at 15 frames per second, thus providing alternative means of capturing events.

Internal memory is set at 50 Mb but is expandable up to 16 Gb by using the microSD slot provided. Blue tooth with A2DP and USB are built in to provide connectivity to other devices for file transfer. GPRS and EDGE are both included and are class 12. An MP3 player and FM radio are provided which supplies alternative means of musical entertainment.
