Bold New Directions, a leading training & development firm, offers Management Training Retreats in Alaska as part of their North American offerings. The recent event in Homer Alaska showcased training in management, leadership & team building.

Bold New Directions, a transformational learning organization based in New England, has expanded its delivery of training services to Alaska. The announcement of its enhanced geographic coverage was made today by company co-founder Suzanne Guthrie.

"We've been providing management training and leadership seminars for several years in the lower states and Canada. This recent opportunity to work with a health care organization in Homer Alaska has intensified our interest in providing our full range of experiential training seminars to Alaska and other regions of the globe" stated Ms. Guthrie.

Jim Hornickel, Director of Training & Development, heads the planning and delivery of training sessions such as the four day retreat held in Alaska. He regards the opportunity to work in far flung areas as a highlight of his role in overseeing training delivery at Bold New Directions. "A large part of our purpose is to expand a company's vision of how to operate a dynamic organization with staff that are thriving. By ensuring our own facilitators engage in new experiences such as visiting the rugged beauty of Alaska, we keep our training team on the leading edge of change" said Mr. Hornickel.

He adds that Bold New Directions offers retreats which can include a range of topics including leadership, management, communication, negotiations, teambuilding, team work and more. "We find that groups learn more about working together in a team when retreats are hosted away from the office in beautiful scenic locations. Getting away from the interruptions of the phone and computer really opens doors for new discoveries about how to work effectively and productively".
