Aug. 20, 2009 - PRLog -- Everyone needs a jewelry box to keep their beautiful jewelry pieces safe and sound, but why not make your a work of art by purchasing one that is made from one of the many fine exotic woods.

Brazilian cherry, Canary wood, Goncalo, Jatoba, Lacewood, Makore, Lyptus, and Purple Heart wood are just a few of the more popular exotic woods. Of course there are others.

You might be surprised to discover that a jewelry box made from exotic wood is not that expensive. In fact, many times you can find them for the same or less than a jewelry box made from domestic woods.

That's because the internet allows you to shop around the world. So while the wood is exotic to us, you can purchase it from a local vender where the wood is domestic. Online jewelry retailers also tend to have a much lower markup so you can still find deals from one of them.

What a great way to keep your beautiful jewelry, in a spending exotic wood jewelry box. The worst part will be trying to decide which jewelry boxes to buy. With so many exotic wood jewelry boxes, it can be a tough job to pick. Of course, there's no reason you can't have more than one, especially if you have a lot of jewelry. Or how about his and her jewelry boxes, so that you can enjoy more than one exotic wood.

Watch for the beautiful carvings found on many of these jewelry boxes. That is a talent in itself and one that is becoming much more appreciated. No longer are we satisfied with a basic wood jewelry box that there are thousands of others exactly like it. We want to celebrate our uniqueness and we now think of our jewelry box as a room accessory rather than just a place to store ones jewelry.

Exotic wood jewelry boxes are stunning in tone and color, carved with beautiful designs, available in many different sizes and shapes, and simply beautiful no matter how you look at them. In fact, how have you managed to live without one so long?
