The British Broadcasting Company (BBC) will be joining Beatles fans on A Magical History Tour bus on November 7, 2009 to film for future broadcast in the UK and on their cable networks worldwide.

Britain's premiere television network, the BBC, will be filming this weekend while taking a tour of Beatles related sites in the Los Angeles area. The film, which is being made for an upcoming broadcast on the BBC, will include footage of the tour itself, its host Gillian Lomax and fans who have also signed up for the event.

The 3.5 hour tour, aptly named A Magical History Tour, will begin its journey in Santa Monica and end at the Hollywood Bowl and will be filled with sites, sounds, history and rare trivia about the Fab Four and their time in southern California.

A Magical History Tour was launched in September 2009 by Beatles expert and radio personality Gillian Lomax. Gillian is originally from Liverpool, England and now resides in L.A. Ms. Lomax spent an extensive amount of time researching the Beatles time in L.A. prior to launching A Magical History Tour.
