Country Brand Index (CBI) is a comprehensive study examining how countries are branded and ranked, and identifies emerging global trends in the world's fastest growing economic sector – travel and tourism, which accounted for US$944 billion in international tourism receipts in 2008.

This year's index, conducted by FutureBrand, a leading global brand consultancy, in conjunction with public relations firm Weber Shandwick's Global Travel & Lifestyle Practice, includes rankings and trends, themes in nation building and marketing issues, as well as more in-depth analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of the top country brands.

FutureBrand has developed a three-tiered system for examining and ranking country brands. The Country Brand Index incorporates global quantitative research, expert opinions, and relevant secondary sources for statistics that link brand equity to assets, growth and expansion. The result is a unique evaluation system that provides the basis of our rankings and insights about the complexities and dynamics of country brands. The expert panel consists of 47 travel, tourism and hospitality professionals who are not associated with one specific destination.

The 2009 Country Brand Index reports on a variety of topics relevant to travelers and tourism professionals including: how small nations can compete with much larger countries; the different ways destinations can communicate value; and the year's best and worst country brand marketing. Other notable topics focus on the use of social media in country branding and how icons, national companies and sports drive the development of country brand image. CBI 2009 touches a number of emerging trends in travel and tourism that include: Value-Oriented Mindset, Attitudes Towards Travel Planning and the Mystery of Authenticity.
