Fall 2010 weddings are catering to classic Roman styles and fairytale designs from an era gone by. While the modern silhouettes and chic cuts are still in style, next year's trends center around princess-style tiered skirts.

From sweetheart necklines to the '50s style mini dress, 2010 wedding season presents a number of fresh and unique styles. Take your pick of any of these top trends for the season when you're selecting the ultimate dress for your wedding day.

Fall 2010 weddings are catering to classic Roman styles and fairytale designs from an era gone by. While the modern silhouettes and chic cuts are still in style, next year's trends center around princess-style tiered skirts, sweetheart necklines and '50s-style mini dresses.

Here are the top trends for 2010 wedding dresses:

'50s Style Knee Length Dress

Playful, sassy and still plenty romantic, the '50s style knee length dress is great for petite brides who want something non-traditional for their wedding. ModernTrousseau.com's Fall 2010 wedding dress collection features this cute but sophisticated dress, complete with an oversized bow and decorated bodice. A fuller skirt and sleeveless bodice adds a fun and playful twist to any wedding.

Asymmetrical Dresses

If you like one-shoulder dresses, Fall 2010 wedding dress collections feature several asymmetrical dresses and one-shoulder designs to create a modern, chic and sophisticated look. These dresses draw attention to the neck, shoulders and upper back, and are ideal for weddings taking place at tropical locations.

Tiered Skirts

Tiered skirts are a top trend for the entire 2010 wedding season, and Fall 2010 wedding dress trends focus on layers and layers of rich organza and chiffon fabrics, coupled with a satin, beaded bodice. Tiered skirts are perfect for brides who want the princess-style wedding without going overboard with the style. Look for tiered skirts not only on the classic white wedding dress, but also in black, dark green and dark blue for the 2010 wedding season.

Sweetheart Necklines

For the bride that wants to wear a strapless dress for the wedding, the sweetheart neckline is one of the top trends for the Fall 2010 season. This neckline can be very flattering for almost all body types, and the season's styles include wrapped chiffon and lace bodices inspired by the famous 'bandeau' dress and fitted bodices with oversized sashes and bows.

Feathers

From peacock plumes to exotic bird feathers, aviary embellishments add a very modern twist to the classic wedding dress. This fashion-forward look is reintroduced in many fall 2010 wedding dress collections with some dresses designed with full feather skirts, and others with simple feather accents around the bodice.

Metallic Embellishments

Oversized metallic flowers and geometric shapes set around the bodice or neckline are a leading trend for the 2010 wedding dress. Pewter, chrome, silver, and brushed gold accents are appearing on Grecian gowns and Roman column dresses for Fall 2010 and can add a glamorous touch to any simple wedding dress.
