

Auto Painting and Dent Repair using Green Practices in Los Angeles

Auto body repair shops who convert to PPG Envirobase paint products are happy with quality, durability and cost while preserving our planet

Dec. 12, 2009 - PRLog -- Los Angeles, CA -- Auto body repair technicians who work for Collision on Wheels in Los Angeles appreciate PPG Envirobase paint products because they pose less of a threat to our environment while being cost-competitive. PPG auto paint products are durable; their topcoat products resist scratches and abrasions.

Some states have imposed guidelines to eliminate oil-based paint products from auto body shops to reduce the VOC (volatile organic compound) emissions and CO2 that goes into the work environment and our atmosphere. Collision on Wheels takes great pride in being eco-friendly. In addition to their use of PPG Envirobase paint products, they repair, rather than replace, plastic bumpers when possible, to reduce rubbish in the landfills. Because Collision on Wheels is mobile, their business uses less energy than the traditional auto body repair shop.

Joaquin Hernandez owns Collision on Wheels specializing in auto painting, minor auto scratch and dent repairs, offering the convenience of same-day repairs at your home or workplace. CW uses PPG finishes that are guaranteed to match your existing paint and they warranty their work for as long as you own your car.
