

Dryer Vent Cleaning Technician in Cincinnati Discusses Pros and Cons of Clotheslines

Some homeowner associations, towns and communities have actually banned the use of clotheslines

Jan. 14, 2010 - PRLog -- Cincinnati, OH – Dryer vent cleaning technician, Ed Rauch, supports programs like Right to Dry, an organization working toward lifting bans on clotheslines. “Clotheslines and indoor drying racks are energy savers,” said Rauch. “Dryer Vent Wizard is all for saving energy.”

When asked if he felt it was risky to promote clotheslines, Ed answered, “We are not worried that people will give up their clothes dryer in favor of clotheslines and put us out of business. We promote green practices. Line-drying when the weather permits conserves energy. Hanging clothes until they’re almost dry, and then finishing in the dryer reduces the amount of lint that is produced.”

Ed discussed some of the pros and cons of line-drying. The benefits he mentioned were:

- Saves money by reducing energy
- Extends the life of your clothing
- Makes clothes smell better, naturally
- Exercise outside while doing household chores
- Bleach and disinfect naturally, with sunlight
- Sunlight and fresh air are healthy
- Drying racks improve humidity in dry weather conditions

Ed was not able to come with as many items on the downside of line-drying. “All I could think of was it can be somewhat time consuming and inconvenient during certain weather conditions. Some homeowner associations, towns and communities have actually banned the use of clotheslines because they find them to be unsightly and give the impression of poverty.”
