June 16, 2010 - PRLog -- Young graduates looking for Infosys freshers jobs during the year 2010 have a great news! Infosys technologies is planning to recruit over 5000 freshers during its Q3 period. Infosys freshers openings can sum to a huge number of around 20,000 according to its CEO, Gopalakrishnan.

Company's Q3 result has been really encouraging to the top management of the company. This has resulted in increase in Infosys recruitment drives when compared to previous year placements. This is also to address organizational issues concerned with increased attrition rate. Increase in the number of new projects in areas like healthcare, logistics and banking could also be attributed to the increasing recruitment drives by Infy.

From freshers point of view, they need to stay equipped and should be aware of the stiff competition that they could face during this year. Infy jobs are not as easy to get as it used to be a couple of years ago. Freshers need to know the stages they have to cross through during placement tests and interviews. Also they need to know the different recruitment modes the company can adopt.

Infosys often visits colleges and universities for recruiting freshers directly. Infy campus placements are the easiest ways to get a job with the company. Elimination is very less when the company visits a college campus. The number of people recruited through campus placement is very high when compared to off campus placements by the company. This is a second chance for freshers who fail to make it during the campus recruitment. 2010 and 2011 are sure to witness a large number of placement drives of both 'campus' and 'off campus' type.
