How a parent successfully used EVDense Digital Diary – Child Custody to defeat the claims of a BPD ex-spouse

Seattle, WA - EVDense Corporation (www.evdense.com), maker of "EVDense Digital Diary - Child Custody," is the leading Internet-based service to help parents win child custody by documenting their daily activities. A customer recently described how EVDense helped in the legal battle to win primary custody. By proving the ex-spouse was showing the telltale behavioral patterns of Borderline Personality Disorder (BPD), the EVDense customer successfully defended unfounded claims of unfit parenting, as well as emotional and physical abuse.

“At first, I was distressed and depressed from my ex’s accusations of me abusing our child,” says B.L. “When I found out about EVDense, I uploaded and organized over two thousand emails and documents into my EVDense account with the help of EVDense experts. Over time, the EVDense Timeline not only helped me see, but helped me prove, that my ex’s claims were false. ”

“Also, by being able to describe my ex’s patterns of raging, accusing, and blaming me for real and imaginary problems, my counselor helped me understand that my ex shows classic symptoms of BPD.”

Daily uploading of evidence was a winning strategy for B.L.:

- School Performance and Activities:
 - o B.L. was depressed by an onslaught of email rants from the ex-spouse, railing about poor attendance and failing grades of the child
 - o Using the EVDense Timeline, B.L. could see a pattern of baseless accusations, arguing and blaming
 - o Another pattern emerged: The ex was claiming superior parenting skills (without any supporting reasons), while never offering any independent suggestions to help the best interests of the child
- Health Concerns
 - o B.L. was angry and confused by the ex's allegations of poor health care for the child
 - o However, the EVDense Timeline showed that the child suffered from mental and physical stress-related symptoms immediately before and after visitations with the ex. Those symptoms (and the need for a counselor) disappeared when the child spent no time with the ex.

During mediation, arbitrations and family court hearings, the EVDense Timeline helped B.L. demonstrate that the ex’s claims were without merit. “I was worried sick about doing the right thing for my child,” said B.L. “Now, even though I still get angry about the constant blaming from my ex, I am not confused about why it is happening, or about my parenting skills. And I have documented, fact-based answers to my ex’s erratic and hurtful accusations.”
