Of course lottery is purely a game of chance, but still you can make some prediction about the outcome. There are some statistical techniques that will help you to predict the right combination.

The best trick is to have a list of the past winning numbers. Picking the numbers that have already won is not a good option. However, you can sometimes find certain numbers, pairs or triplets repeating more frequently than the others.

Another thing to bear in mind is to avoid playing with a set of numbers which are all odd or even. For example, you should not play with combinations like 2 8 18 26 34 44 - all even or 3 15 21 41 33 57 - all odd. Choosing consecutive numbers is a good idea. It is commonly found that a good percentage of winning combinations have numbers drawn in this way. But, a combination with consecutive numbers at the beginning and ending is better avoided. In other words, if your lottery game has five total numbers, then avoid selections like 1 2 3 4 5. Most users also look at the sum of the numbers in the set of combination. The sum can sometimes represent the difference between the winning and losing. In the case of a Pick 6 Lotto Game, the sum often falls between 121 and 186 whereas in Pick 5 it will be between 63 and 116.

Above all, there are few sets of numbers that can limit your chance of winning the lottery game. Don't choose numbers that are on arithmetic sequence, that is, numbers like 2 4 6 8 10 12. Moreover, many people select the numbers in straight line or in diagonal. So, avoid making such patterns on your play slip.

Fortunately, you can find a number of lottery prediction software in the market. Using past draw calculations, these software will find out the right combination of numbers that will draw next.
