It's simply amazing.

According to Natasha herself, through her twitter account, she went back to her hometown London to shoot the video for the song with photographer and director Kathie Rankin. The music video premiered November 3, 2010. It features Natasha performing in various outfits. The video starts with a black figure of Natasha singing the song. She performs the verse while off-screen characters have her change in different outfits. The chorus then shifted in showing her singing in a shiny fur, leather and tribal-like outfit. The next verse shows off-screen characters doing her make-up while she is singing with a megaphone. The second chorus shows her wearing a police cap and a scene where she is crawling on mud. In the bridge, Natasha is in a lace dress singing in a black and white patterns. When it goes to the chorus, she threw paints of different colors on the wall and mud-scene returns through while Natasha is singing. The last scenes involves her removing all of the outfits that the off-screen characters are trying on her then shifting on her singing with the megaphone. She then fades to black as the video ends.
