

Complete Encyclopedia on Ayurveda made online

The Knowledge Process Outsourcing (KPO) industry of India added another feather to its already chequered cap by making online a complete encyclopedia on Ayurveda in March 2007.

March 8, 2007 - PRLog -- The Knowledge Process Outsourcing (KPO) industry of India added another feather to its already chequered cap by making online a complete encyclopedia on Ayurveda in March 2007. The demanding task is made possible by the efforts of Ayush Informatics, a Panchkula, Haryana based organization in India. The Director of the company Mr. Ramesh Mehta made the launch of the website www.ayushveda.com official. He acknowledged this website to be resultant of his profound aspiration to make the information about Ayurveda reach every corner of the world. For this purpose the medium of the Internet is the best choice as it has far reaching accessibility for one and all.

Mr. Mehta described the intensive endeavour undertaken by utilizing the services of Ayurvedic doctors, practitioners in the related fields, researchers and prominent writers from all over India. This illustrative team has been solely responsible to research the ancient texts as well as the modern versions and provide comprehensive material pertaining to all aspects of Ayurveda. The outcome is the website www.ayushveda.com which contains information about basics and various branches of Ayurveda, several herbs, corrective measures for lifestyles, yoga, massage, diet, panchakarma, pharmacology, diagnosis and different types of treatments, general health care and their home remedies. The site also contains a vast glossary of 2000 terms for further study.

The website also would serve as a platform for all who are actively participating in the field of Ayurveda by giving them an opportunity to open a free webpage and illustrate their expert services. This would be under the section of "ayurveda". Here the practitioners can also write and post their articles and share their knowledge with the people worldwide.

The chief of the creative team is Mr. Sahil Mehta, who is responsible for the conceptualization and presentation of the website in its present layout. He stated the importance of the section of "Know about Ayurveda" which is the exclusive place for finding the lesser known knowledge about Ayurveda. The information promoted here has never been published elsewhere. This would make this website stand out amidst others already afloat on the same subject on the Internet. Here complete wisdom about the ancient methodology of Ayurveda from India has been presented in an easy to understand format.

Mr. Sahil Mehta also mentioned the interactive nature of this website by calling attention to the section of Discussion forums, free Newsletter, Blogs and news updates on Ayurveda. He cited that free online consultation with Ayurvedic doctors and practitioners would be made available through online chats and emails. This would be made available in India to begin with and later it would be marketed worldwide.

He further added that in the coming month the website would be extended to have about 2000 fully constructed pages making it the largest website on Ayurveda. Future expansion plans include adding many more features and services and making an international presence. The company is launching its Free Consultation section next week, whereby a visitor can ask questions and get answers from many ayurvedic doctors and practitioners worldwide, for free.
