

Local Indie Pop Collective Balsa Gliders Headline The Pour House Music Hall

Local Professionals To Perform In Downtown Raleigh On Friday, June 5

June 3, 2009 - PRLog -- RALEIGH, N.C. – The Balsa Gliders, which consists of area professionals playing “melodic pop/rock, clever lyrics and deadpan delivery,” will perform at The Pour House Music Hall located at 224 S. Blount St. on Friday, June 5. Mr. Mustard opens for the band at 8 p.m. with The Groves playing the late show. The Balsa Gliders are: bassist Greg Jones, rector at St. Michael’s Episcopal Church; guitarists Ben Davis and Charles Marshall, media lawyers; drummer Chuck Price, Bank of America marketing director; and Dr. Michael Ferguson, Wake Med ENT. Raleigh City Councilor Philip Isley’s 12-year-old daughter, Grace, will also be performing with the group as a guest bassist..

The band’s new album, Danceable in Victor, is filled with rock centered around a young woman on the run from the Federal government. The pace of the record moves swiftly too, with 11 songs clocking in at 33 minutes. The album is available on iTunes and other digital outlets.

Quotes:

“We are excited to headline at the Pour House this Friday night, especially with Grace performing with us,” said Jones. “Given her age, I am in awe of how cool she is on stage.”

About The Balsa Gliders:

The Balsa Gliders are an unlikely indie-pop collective. They hold down day jobs in medicine, law and banking during the day, have growing families and are pushing 40. But they have shared a passion for indie pop since the early 1990s in Chapel Hill, and 10 years ago, they stopped listening to indie rock and started playing it, culminating with a debut album (Cookout) produced by ex-Squirrel Nut Zipper Ken Mosher that earned 4.5 stars in AMG AllMusicGuide.
