Medical equipment sales? 914 jobs. Physical therapist? 682 jobs. Radiology tech? 462 jobs. Pharmacy technician: 420 jobs. Nurse jobs in Iowa? 154 jobs. Nurse practitioner in New York? 130 jobs. The list goes on...

There is no unemployment in health care, in fact there are many more jobs than workers, and there is no end in sight. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics (bls.gov), seven of the 20 top growth occupations are in healthcare.

Some of the fastest growth jobs, such as home health care aides, require only short-term on-the-job training. Others, like medical assistants, pharmacy technicians and dental assistants, often need only moderate on-the-job training. These jobs are available now, today, nationwide, at Health Care Hiring. <http://www.healthcarehiring.com/jobs/q-pharmacy+technicia...>

The 2006-2016 occupational employment growth projections show that health care provided over 14 million jobs in 2006, and this number will grow by 21% over a ten year period.

Employment in health care continued to rise in August (28,000), with gains in ambulatory care and in nursing and residential care.... Health care has added 544,000 jobs since the start of the recession.... Health care will generate 3 million new wage and salary jobs between 2006 and 2016, more than any other industry. (bls.gov)

So in a nutshell, if you are looking for a job, look to healthcare. If you are planning a career, consider the many, varied health care and medical occupations available. Join the millions of satisfied caregivers, providers, technologists and medical support workers today!
