Oct. 7, 2009 - PRLog -- SPRINGFIELD, MO – Game camera experts and retailers, TrailCamPro recently conducted the 2009 Trail Camera Shootout designed to test which game cameras do the best job of capturing photos in the field.

TrailCamPro is a leading retailer of trail cameras and accessories that tests and reviews nearly every type of digital game camera available to make the buying process easier for the consumer. As the largest source of trail camera information, the website features unbiased scouting camera reviews, game camera comparisons, comprehensive camera trap tests, sample photos from all the scouting camera brands, and other essential information for consumers.

In keeping with its reputation for providing consumers with the best digital trail camera reviews available, the company conducts a yearly 'Shootout' to better understand the pros and cons of each trail camera on the market. Some of the chief factors that were taken into consideration when judging the performance of the various trail cameras were: detection width, detection range, and trigger speed.

"We lined up a fair representation of every brand of scouting camera available at the time of the shootout. With each unit mounted to a board, we walked across the row of trail cameras at 10' intervals from 10' out to 80'. Each camera was then awarded a score between 1 and 8 at each distance based on how quickly it was able to capture a photo of the test subject," says Rich Howell, President of TrailCamPro (www.trailcampro.com).

Complete details about the 2009 Trail Camera Shootout, along with test photographs and summary of results by brand are available at: <http://www.trailcampro.com/2009trailcamerashootout.aspx>

In addition to providing the most comprehensive reviews in the industry, the TrailCamPro also prides itself on having the lowest prices on the web and backs it up with its Low Price Guarantee. Customers considering a trail camera have free access to trail camera expert who can help them evaluate their needs and choose a suitable camera. TrailCamPro also prides itself on its excellent return policy and the fact that all products come with a 100% guarantee.

"We are the largest source of trail camera information and expert advice is just a phone call away for customers. Unlike most other stores, we encourage you to call us for any questions you need answered just so we can ensure you are completely satisfied with the product you buy," concludes Howell.
