

Variable Life Insurance Policies Give Holders More Investment Options

Pay less in the long run and still provide quality coverage to your family with variable universal life insurance.

Nov. 25, 2009 - PRLog -- Chicago (InsuranceAgents.com) – Life insurance policies are not popular topics of conversation but as people get older, they start to consider more and more the protection of their family after they are no longer able to be with them. This unique life insurance policy will not only provide permanent coverage to your beneficiaries, it also allows the options for you to invest part of your premium payment.

In a recent article posted by InsuranceAgents.com, “Variable Universal Life Insurance,” they provide insight to the variable life insurance policy and the different investment options that policyholders can take advantage of. “On top of providing a policyholder with all of the benefits a standard life insurance policy would, a variable policy allows you to divide a portion of your premium dollars to a separate account,” states the article. The account can consist of any type of investment that the policyholder chooses including equity, money market, bond and stock funds. Since investments are not guaranteed, it is possible that the value of your life insurance policy could decrease from a bad investment, make sure your policy doesn’t allow your death benefit to go below the minimum amount you wish for your beneficiaries to receive.

This life insurance policy offers a variety of options that standard policies do not including tax-free investment options. These investments can end up helping you pay less for your premium in the long run and still give your family the financial support they need.
