

Matthew Brickman Explains If Child Support, HOA and Business Disputes Can Be Mediated

It is well known that divorce cases can be mediated prior to going to court, especially in states such as Florida where it is mandatory for divorcing couples with children to mediate first. Matthew Brickman recently addressed questions on whether other types of disputes can be mediated as well.

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. - Aug. 31, 2017 - PRLog -- Matthew Brickman, President and founder of iMediate Inc. (also known as iChatMediation), has successfully mediated hundreds of divorces and other types of disputes. As a family law mediator with a historically strong success rate, many couples come to Mr. Brickman to inexpensively mediate their divorce terms and move on quickly with their lives.

Recently there have been questions as to whether other matters can also be mediated including child support, HOA disputes, and other business or contract dispute matters. Mr. Brickman recently released a video on his YouTube Channel to address these questions as he details in the video below.
